CHARLES-TOWN, Aug. 15.

Last Friday Morning we were favoured by Mr. Philip Pearson with the following Copy of a Poſtſcript to the Pennſylvania Gazette, printed at York-town the 4th of July laſt:

The following important Intelligence is extracted from the New-Jerſey Gazette, of July 1, 1778.

IT having been previouſly determined to attack the enemy on their march, a ſuitable diſpoſition was made. General Lee, with a detachment of picked men, conſiſting of about 1500, and reinforced by a ſtrong body of Jerſey militia, advanced down to Engliſh Town, about ſix miles from Monmouth Court-Houſe; the militia then proceeded to the Meeting-houſe; The main army under General Waſhington being four miles in the rear of Engliſh Town. At three o'clock on Sunday morning the firſt diviſion under General Kniphauſen, began their march, of which we had intelligence in about two hours, when General Lee began his attack, and drove the enemy for ſome time, but they being reinforced, he was obliged to retreat in turn, until met by General Waſhington with the main army, which formed in the moſt advantageous ground; in the mean time, two field pieces covered two regiments of the detachment, and commanded by Colonels Livingſton and Stuart, advanced to check the enemy's approach, which they performed with great ſpirit, and conſiderable loſs on both ſides; this ſervice being performed, they returned with the pieces to the front line; and there completely formed, when the ſevereſt cannonade began, that it is thought ever happened in America; in the mean time ſtrong detachments march'd and attacked the enemy with ſmall arms, with various ſucceſs. The enemy was finally obliged to give way, and we took poſſeſſion of the field covered with dead and wounded. The intenſe heat of the weather and preceding fatigue of the troops, made it neceſſary to halt and reſt for ſome time. The enemy for ſome time preſenting a front about a mile advanced beyond the ſeat of action; as ſoon as the troops had recovered breath, General Waſhington ordered two brigades to advance upon each of their flanks, and intended to move in front at a proper time to ſupport them, but before they could reach their deſtination, night came on, and made any further movement impracticable.

They left on the field, the Hon. Col. Monckton, with ſeveral other officers and a great number of privates, which cannot yet be aſcertained with preciſion. At twelve o'clock on Sunday night they moved off with great precipitation, leaving at the Court Houſe, five wounded officers and about 40 privates. They began the attack with their veteran grenadiers and light infantry, which rendered their loſs ſtill more important. Our Lieutenant Col. Bonner of Penſylvania, and Major Dickenſon of Virginia are ſlain, Col. Barber of this ſtate is wounded by a muſket ball that paſſed through the right of his body, but it is hoped 'twill not prove mortal:——Our troops behaved with the greateſt bravery, and oppoſed the flower of the Britiſh army. Our artillery was well ſerved and did amazing execution; before, during, and after the action, deſerters came over in great numbers, and ſtill continue ſo to do: Of the enemy's dead many have been found without any wound, but being heavily cloathed they ſunk under the heat and fatigue; we are well aſſured that the Heſſians refuſed to engage, declaring, it was too hot. Their line of march from the Court-Houſe, was ſtrewed with dead, with arms, knapſacks and accoutrements, which they had dropt in their retreat: They had the day before taken about 25 priſoners, whom in their haſte they left behind. Had we been poſſeſſed of a powerful body of cavalry on the field, there is no doubt but that the ſucceſs would have been much more complete; but they had been ſo much employed in harraſſing the enemy, during the march, and were ſo detached as to give the enemy a great ſuperiority and much advantage. Our ſucceſs, under Heaven, is to be wholly aſcribed to the good diſpoſition made by his Excellency, ſupported by the firmneſs and bravery of both officers and men, who were emulous to diſtinguiſh themſelves on this occaſion; the great advance of the enemy on their way, their poſſeſſion of the ſtrong grounds at Middletown, added to the exhauſted ſtate of our troops, made an immediate purſuit ineligible; and our army now remains about one mile advanced from the field of battle, having been ſince employed in collecting the dead and wounded, and burying the former.

By a gentleman juſt arrived in York-Town, who was preſent in the action, we are informed as follows: That he ſaw upwards of 300 of the enemy buried, that there were a great number of wounded and deſerters; and that it was aſſerted by a moderate calculation, that the enemy had loſt in all, ſince they left the Delaware, 4300 men; he further adds, that General Waſhington in general orders, the day after the battle, congratulated the army on the victory obtained over the arms of his Britannick Majeſty, and thanked in the warmeſt terms the gallant officers and men, who diſtinguiſhed themſelves on this occaſion; he alſo ſays, the General concluded with obſerving, that it was with particular pleaſure he informed General Knox and the officers of the artillery, that the enemy had done them the juſtice to acknowledge, that no artillery could be managed better than ours had been.

The ſame Day Capt. Edward North returned from the Northward, and brought a Virginia Gazette of the 10th of July, containing the following other Particulars:

BALTIMORE, July 4.

Extract of a Letter from his Excellency General Waſhington to General Arnold in Philadelphia, dated Fields, near Monmouth Court Houſe, June 29, 1778.

"I have the honour to inform you, that about ſeven o'clock yeſterday morning both armies advanced on each other. About 11 they met on the grounds near Monmouth Court houſe, when an action commenced. We forced the enemy from the field, and encamped on the ground. They took a ſtrong poſt in our front, ſecured on both flanks by marſhes and thick woods, where they remained until about twelve at night, and then retreated. I cannot at this time go into a detail of matters. When opportunity permits, I ſhall take the liberty of tranſmitting Congreſs a more particular account of the proceedings of the day."

Extract of a Letter from Head Quarters, Monmouth County, Freehold Court Houſe, June 29, 1778.

"—— We conteſted the ground with the flower of their army, their light infantry and grenadiers, with between 4 and 5000 of our men. During the whole day our officers behaved with great bravery, covering and ſupporting each other with remarkable conduct and firmneſs. After beating them from every poſt they occupied, we remained maſters of the field of battle in the evening.

"They left behind them, to our mercy and humanity, a number of officers and privates, in Freehold Court houſe. Beſides theſe, they carried off 60 waggons full of wounded. We have already found dead on the field of action about 300; but as the view has been curſory, there muſt be many more. Our loſs is very inconſiderable."

Extract of a Letter from Philadelphia, Wedneſday July 1, 1778.

"We have undoubted intelligence, that in the late battle of Monmouth, in New-Jerſey, the enemy have ſuffered to the amount of 5000 men, in killed, priſoners and deſerters.

"Doctor Kennedy, of Baltimore, is among the priſoners. He was taken by Capt. Plunket; and immediately liberated on parole.

"Col. Ramſey, of Baltimore, is ſlightly wounded, made priſoner, and admitted to his parole by the enemy.

"Among the ſlain of the enemy are an aid de camp to General Clinton, Col. Hyde of the guards, Col Monckton of the grenadiers, and Col. Abercrombie of the infantry, with many other officers of great eſtimation."

We ſhould not have preſented our Readers with theſe imperfect accounts, if any others could have been obtained: But laſt Week's Poſt brought us no Mail from the Northward.

Major General Robert Howe, Col. Charles Coteſworth Pinckney, ſeveral other officers, and a number of the troops that went from this ſtate, are returned from the expedition to Fort Tonyn, on the River St. Mary.

Laſt Friday a conſiderable number of thoſe perſons, who did not find it inconvenient to remain among, and ſo of us, until the law required a teſt of their fidelity and allegiance, ſailed for Europe in the ſhip Hope, James Gillis maſter.——We are obliged to omit their names this week for want of room.

The maſter of a Spaniſh ſloop from Havana, arrived laſt Wedneſday reports, that the court of Spain had ſtopt all Britiſh ſhips in its European Ports.

Letters from Cape Francois of the 9th of July, adviſe, that a fleet of merchantmen ſailed from thence for France on the 7th under convoy; that ſuch convoys were appointed to ſail every 15 days; and that no veſſels would be permitted to ſail in the intermediate periods.

By the return tranſmitted to Congreſs by General Waſhington, our loſs in the battle of Monmouth, in killed, wounded and miſſing, did not exceed 363. Many of the miſſing, amounting to 163, fell through fatigue and afterwards came in.

Late laſt night arrived here Capt. Romaine Ingoult, from North-Carolina, and brought with him a Virginia Gazette of the 17th of July, from which we have taken the following

IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE.

PHILADELPHIA, July 4.

GENTLEMEN, Paris, May 18, 1778.

CErtain intelligence having been received, that 11 Britiſh ſhips of war, viz. one of 50 guns, nine of 74, and one of 64, are in the Road of St. Helen's, near Portſmouth, bound for North America, and the United States being in Alliance with France, you are requeſted, as ſpeedily as poſſible, to convey this information to the comanders of any French fleet, or ſhips of war in America, by ſending them this letter, and alſo to publiſh the Contents thereof in all the Continental news-
[illegible]
Gentlemen,
Your moſt
[illegible]

To the Governor, or [illegible] fellow, or Warden, or ber of any Houſe of Re tatives of the Thirteen ed States in America.

Read in Congreſs, July 2, 1778, and ordered to be published. CHARLES THOMSON, Sec.

On Thurſday laſt the Hon. Congreſs
States met at the State Houſe in that city.

The number of deſerters, chiefly Heſſians, who left the Britiſh army [ſince they left this city,] amount to upwards of 1500.

We hear that the Britiſh troops now in New York are preparing to evacuate that city, and that the whole of the troops now on the continent will ſoon be drawn off to Britain or the Weſt Indies.

PHILADELPHIA, July 9.

The Chief Juſtice has been ſitting at the city Court
Houſe for ſeveral days paſt, to hear the charges againſt Tories accuſed of joining and aſſiſting the Britiſh army. We hear that he will ſit there on Saturday next, in the forenoon, for the ſame purpoſe.

The Hon. the Supreme Executive Council of this Commonwealth, have appointed agents for ſeizing the eſtates forfeited by traitors, &c.

WILLIAMSBURGH, July 17.

CAPT. Edward Travis, who left Philadelphia five days ſince [the 12th] informs, that a French fleet off the Capes of Delaware (which conſiſted of one ſhip of 90 guns, two of 84, eight of 74, one of 64, and four frigates of 30 guns each) had lately taken and deſtroyed 3 Britiſh frigates, and drove a fourth on ſhore, the officers and crew of which are now priſoners in Philadelphia; that the French fleet had taken pilots on board, and left the Delaware laſt Sunday for New-York, with intention to attack that place; that the French Admiral had offered Congreſs 5000 troops, who were on board the fleet, and 4000 more land forces if wanted; and that war was declared by France againſt Britain the 19th of May laſt. The above news, Capt Travis informs, was communicated to him by our Delegates in Congreſs, who informed him, they had it from Mr. Girard, Royal Syndic of Strasburgh, Secretary of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Council of State, and Ambaſſador from the Court of France to theſe United States, who arrived at Congreſs laſt Sunday (the 12th.)

Capt. Travis alſo informs, that General Waſhington, with part of his army had croſſed the North river; that orders were given, by the General, for all the militia Colonels within 50 miles to join him, with all their force, as ſoon as poſſible; and that General Waſhington had received Orders from Congreſs to attack New-York.

It appears by General Waſhington's Letter to Congreſs, dated Engliſhtown, July 1, 1778, giving an account of his movements previous to, and of, the battle of Monmouth, that Major General Lee's conduct, had ſubjected him to an arreſt, and trial by a court martial.

Mr. Powis in the Houſe of Commons, on the 21ſt of April laſt, in a committee of the whole on the ſtate of the nation, having propoſed (after a proper introduction) "that the Commiſſioners "powers ſhould be extended ſo far as to enable "them to declare the Americans abſolute and "forever independent," produced the following declaration from Governor Johnſtone, viz. That he had always oppoſed the acts which had been paſſed againſt America, but that when their grievances had been redreſſed, he had obtained his end. That the legiſlative power of Great Britain had paſſed a law to grant the colonies full ſatisfaction; to deſire more would be an open rebellion, which every true Briton ought to oppoſe. It is there I have always thought, ſaid he, and with the greateſt pleaſure I find, that the Earl of Chatham is of the ſame opinion. I have too high an opinion of the honour, of the ſentiments, and of the loyalty of the Americans in general, to ſuppoſe, that they will deſire more than is offered to them. Our violence has heretofore re-united the moderate and the ambitious. Our moderation will now [illegible] them. The ſame violence has heretofore [illegible] this kingdom, and the ſame moderation [illegible] unite us. Our meaſures until now have [illegible] conteſt between all America, and the [illegible] land; but the change now that is [illegible] will fix the diſpute between all England [illegible] half of America. And the ſame [illegible] it has heretofore had over us, we [illegible] have over them, &c.—Mr. Dundas [illegible] al heat againſt the Colonies, repro[illegible]is's motion, which at laſt was [illegible]
